

Human Services Leadership Online

Bachelor of Science

The College of Education and Human Services offers students interested in working with non-profit and government agencies an online option to earn their bachelor's degree. Students of the Human Services Leadership Online (HSLO) program take 40 credits within the core courses, which focus on:

- Professional leadership and decision-making
- Human behavior
- Intervention strategies
- Program evaluation
- Grant writing
- Legal and ethical issues

Many graduates who earn this degree go on to pursue careers as advocates, criminal justice workers and community planners and administrators. Others pursue master's degrees in counseling education and public administration.

Recent HSLO graduates have gone on to work at the Boys & Girls Club, the Humane Society, March of Dimes, Red Cross, United Way and YMCA, as well as emergency shelters, domestic abuse services and food banks.

You must have an associate degree or at least 56 credits from another institution to begin the major courses. Please contact the pre-advisor to find out how to apply your credits to this program.
